Harriman Shows Up As Russian

By ANDREW TULLY,

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—Robert Amory, deputy director of the Central Intelligence Agency, showed up at a "New Frontier" costume party thrown by newsmen Walter Ridder and Mrs. Ridder, dressed as Fidel Castro. Besides beard and army fatigues, Amory even carried a Czech rifle.

The usually staid Averell Harriman, President Kennedy's new roving Ambassador, arrived in baggy breeches, high boots and fancy packet—all from Russia. And Mr. Kennedy's choice as Ambassador to India, Dr. Kenneth Galbraith, exposed plenty of his six-foot, seven-inch frame in a set of kilts.
